

Nicole Krueger

Eugene, OR

Students who do not have access to technology in their formative years will be at a disadvantage when they emerge into a digitally driven job market. To effectively teach through technology, today's teachers need high-speed broadband access -- yet many impoverished schools across the nation cannot afford these services on their own. E-Rate is absolutely critical to ensure equity of access for all.